MOBILIZATION EVALUATION

Strong Mobilizing Church

Your church is heavily involved in missions. You have an effective mobilization strategy. This means your church is giving a high percentage of your overall budget to mission causes. You are intentionally educating your members about missions around the world. You regularly let your church know about missionary needs around the world and have some specific ways of praying for those on the field. You have people in your church praying for missionaries by name. Your church highlights these needs even in your main worship services. Your church invests in people and sends them out into the mission field for short and long-term assignments on a regular basis. You have helped to plant other churches. Your church can help other churches learn how to mobilize members into the harvest.

Healthy Mobilizing Church

Your church is very involved in missions. You have some kind of a mobilization strategy. This means your church is giving a good percentage of your overall budget to mission causes. You educate your members about missions around the world. You let your church know about missionary needs around the world and have some specific ways of praying for those on the field. Your church has sent people out into the mission field for short and long-term assignments. You have helped to plant other churches. Your church can encourage other churches learn how to mobilize members into the harvest and can still grow in how effective you are in mobilizing your members.

Median Mobilizing Church

Your church is involved in missions. You have helped to mobilize members into being on mission. This means your church is giving a good percentage of your overall budget to mission causes. You have educated some of your members about missions around the world. You have a small group that regularly prays for missionaries. Your church has probably sent a few people over the years to the field for short and long-term assignments. Your church can continue what you are going and can grow a lot in effectively mobilizing your members.

Low Mobilizing Church

Your church is a missions-minded church. You give to missions causes but don't have much intentionality in mobilizing members into missions. This means your church is giving a percentage of your overall budget to mission causes. You educate some members about missions around the world. You have a small group that prays for missionaries in your church on a regular basis. Your church gives to offerings that send missionaries out into the mission field for short and long-term assignments. Your church can build on a good foundation to move from being missions-minded to being a mobilizing church. You would benefit from developing an intentional plan to mobilize people into the mission field.

Non-Mobilizing Church

Your church is an SBC church, thus you partner with a missions mobilizing denomination. You give to the cooperative program and maybe some special offerings, but don't have much intentionality in mobilizing members into missions. Some of your members know about missions around the world, but are self-educated. You may have a small group that prays for missionaries in your church at times. Your church doesn't personally have much connection with missionaries or church planters. Your church can benefit from a good cooperative relationship with another church or a denominational representative to move from being an affiliated church to being a mobilizing church. You would benefit from developing an intentional plan to mobilize people into the mission field.
